November 9.—The abdication of Emperor William of Germany is formally and officially announced tonight in a dispatch from the Havas news agency, dated Basel.
This dispatch does not state in whose favor the abdication was made or to whom it was A British wireless station has picked up a German wireless message this afternoon stating:

"The German Imperial Chancellor Maximilian of Baden has issued the following decree:
"The Kaiser and King have decided to renounce his throne.
The Chancellor will remain in office until the questions connected with his abdication and the renouncing of the throne of the German Empire and the Kingdom of Prussia has been settled."For the regency he intends to appoint Deputy Ebert as Imperial Chancellor and he proposes that a bill shall be brought to the Reichstag for the establishgation of general suffrage and for a constitutional German national

ABDICATION OF BRUNSWICK.

LONDON, E. O. S., Nov. 9.— A telegram received from Copenhagen asserts that Emperor Wilhelm's son-in-law, the Duke of Brunswick, and his successor, have abdicated.It is reported from Amsterdam that a revolution is spreading over western Germany and it is reported to have reached Co-logne.Washington, Nov. 9.—So far as the American government was advised late today, no word has been received by Marshal Foch from the German high command since the courier of the armistice envoy started through the battle lines last night with the surrender terms and the ultimatum for their acceptance before eleven o'clock Monday morning.Diplomatic dispatches through Switzerland today, say official German information, shows the socialists are delaying steps to force the Kaiser's abdication, pending the expected signing of the armistice.

Wait Armistice.

Berne, Switzerland, Nov. 9.—
The German socialists decided not to carry out at noon today their threat to withdraw from the government if Emperor William had not abdicated by that hour, according to a Berlin dispatch. Instead they extend the minutes, it is stated, "In consideration of an eventual armistice."

EMPEROR WILLIAM

William, the second, the emperor of Germany and king of Prussia, was born in 1859. He was educated at Cassel and Bonn, afterwards entered the army and took a keen interest in military affairs. He succeeded his father, in 1888, and the first showed remarkable decision of character, and a capacities for affairs. In spite of occasional eccentricities and lastly impulses has stood him in good stead and has been a source of strength for his Empire. One of his chief aims is to make Germany a great naval power, another to make it a great industrial country. In domestic affairs he has incurred some unfavorable criticism, but showed that he had full confidence in himself. He is the most picturesque of present day rulers, and decidedly a man of parts. He visited England in 1907, and was present at King Edward's funeral in 1910.He will be brought back by the same courier that took it to German headquarters, in which event it cannot be delivered before the middle of the afternoon at the earliest. The German government, however, may use the wireless, in which case the principle of the armistice will be invoked. The German high command will have only to ratify the decision thus conveyed to them.French Conservative.
Paris is remarkably restrained and conservative, is unanimous in the view that Germany will capitulate before Monday. There is no talk of the German high command in Germany, but it is thought that the Germans have had enough to make it imperative for the government to make peace at the earliest possible moment.
Copies of the Pictorial, which thoroughly sums up the views of all editorial items when he says:
"The details of revolutionary movements in Germany are lacking, but we learn enough from hour to hour to feel already that they are neither superficial nor fictitious. Do they mean a complete revolution? Or do they but riot due to the reaction of the defeat? What authority does the republic proclaimed at Munich possess? These are questions which concern Germany alone."They made a few observations merely pointing out material difficulties standing in the way of carrying out some quite secondary clauses.
When they wrote an account of the proceedings and sent them by an aide to Premier Clemenceau, who received them at noon.The German delegates are lodged in a country mansion at Reims, six miles east of Compiègne and thirty miles from Marshal Foch's headquarters.Those Present.
With the commander-in-chief at the time of the interview were Major General Maxime Weygand, his assistant, Vice-Admiral Sir Rosslyn Wemyss, first lord of the British admiralty, and Vice-Admiral William S.
Sims, American representative.Paris, Nov. 9.—Germany's armistice delegates were received by Marshal Foch, Friday morning at nine o'clock, in a railroad car in which the commander-in-chief of the army, according to the Paris Journal. When the Germans credentials had been opened and verified, Mathias Erzberger, leader of the enemy delegation, according to French reports, had been advised by President Wilson that Marshal Foch was qualified to communicate to them the conditions of the armistice. The plenipotentiaries to take cognizance of the terms and eventually to sign an armistice.Gave the Terms.
Marshal Foch then gave the terms in a loud voice, dwelling on each word. The Germans were prepared by semi-official communications for the stipulations, and according to French reports, they forth in detail, the concrete demands seemed to bring to them for the first time full realization of the extent of the German defeat.

Max to Act.

It is regarded probable in well informed circles that Prince Maximilian, the German imperial councillor, will today communicate the terms of the armistice to a committee of the Reichstag party leaders and will himself convey their votes to accept or refuse to sign the armistice.
Sims Present.
Vice-Admiral William S. Sims, commander of the American naval forces in the war zone, was present at the first interview between Marshal Foch and the German armistice mission yesterday. He is American representative of Marshal Foch's headquarters.Saloniki, Nov. 9.—Allied troops according to army men it did not do.

the revolution which has broken out in the Bavarian capital, it appears times designated him as president of the Bavarian republic which has been proclaimed.Eisner, the adviser add, has organ-respects similar to a Russian Soviet.Revolt Spreads.

Copenhagen, Nov. 9.—The uprising Northwestern Germany, according to attended by serious disturbances.Schleswig Is Quiet.

UNDER ARMISTICE TERMS

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

Washington, Nov. 9.—Italian troops continue to occupy territory under the terms of the Austrian armistice and have entered the Reschen pass, according to an official cablegram to the Italian embassy. This afternoon the army corps have been taking a successful part in the offensive since November 4th, the dispatch adds. The Italian troops have broken through the defense system of the enemy between Chivres and La Rochelle, occupied the town of Lethuel and have broken down the resistance of the Germans along the Surtout.CONGESTION CAUSES

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

New York, Nov. 9.—Congestion of the Transatlantic cable to such an extent that messages are subject to eral days, prompted the division of Foreign Exchange of the Federal Reserve

Tosni, Siberia, Nov. 9.—Bolshevik forces and Austro-German prisoners operating in Siberia are now almost completely scattered, according to an official statement issued at the war office here today. Small bands attempted to pillage several towns during October, but were immediately dispersed, the statement says.Fear Return.
Abject terror that the Bolsheviks are coming back to kill and rob, reigns at the house of the peasants in many little villages on the banks of the Dvina and Vaga rivers, back of the allied lines.The respondent, who has just returned from the Dvina-Vaga front, found the peasantry, full of hatred for the Bolsheviks, but afraid to fight.
In many places they have already seen their friends shot and bayoneted or brutally killed by slow, torturing methods when suspected of aiding the allies.Dig Own Graves.
In one little village it was reported to the correspondent the Bolsheviks compelled three peasants to dig their own graves and jump into them to try them out. The peasants were shot a moment later.25,000 WISCONSIN

AND HE STILL LIVES

[By International News]
Palmira, N. Y., Nov. 9.—"I am a lieutenant in the 35th army and proud of it. I shouted Hans Gies, 22 years old, to the mob in front of his home yesterday afternoon. I have never done anything to injure this country or any of the people here. I have obeyed the law.
Shoot me or hang me if you will. I am here."An American flag was shoved into the old man's hands and he cried, "I have obeyed the law."
He died."Kiss it," ordered a discharged soldier from Camp Dix. The old man did.Gies was in danger of bodily harm when Fred Rowley, village president, nailed an American flag on the door of the house and appealed to the mob to respect it. Guards were later placed at the house to protect Gies, who is reported to have portrayed the Kaiser, von Hindenburg, Bismarck and other Germans on the walls in his home.GERMAN SOCIALISTS HAVE TAKEN COMPLETE
CONTROL OF REICHSTAG

[BY INTERNATIONAL NEWS]

Washington, Nov. 9.—The German Socialists and the Radicals have taken over control of the Reichstag.
Events within Germany are developing so rapidly that it is almost impossible to keep up with them.While the army chiefs at Spa deliberate over the armistice terms, carried to them by Captain Heldor, aide to Gen. von Winterfeldt, and decide what their reply shall be, the political developments in Germany are overshadowing any action they may take.
The reply on the armistice terms will necessarily be on its way back to the French lines within the next few hours. Spa, where German great headquarters is located, and where the Kaiser is believed to have taken refuge is near Liege and about 122 miles by road from La Capelle, where the German armistice envoys are quartered.The roads are very bad and traveling as he was forced to, by night.
Captain Heldor could have hardly reached his destination before daylight today. He would be likely to find the military chiefs waiting for him and an immediate conference would be held. Officials here who are familiar with the situation say that the captain could be expected to leave on his return trip about noon today, and that, traveling by day, he could make the trip in five hours, although there will be necessary delays in getting through the military lines on the battle front.It was believed here that the decision of the army chiefs would be in the hands of the German plenipotentiaries tonight. In many, of course, because of a prolonged session of the military conference, or for some other impelling reason.The one thing missing just now seems to be a leader. The radical Socialists have refused to accept Scheidemann on the ground that he has been too friendly to the Kaiser.
The moderate Socialists, however, refused Dr. Karl Liebknecht to dominate, declaring that he leans too far toward the Bolshevik idea. Should the present developments bring to the front a man or men about whom all can rally, the advent of a German republic would be a certainty in the very near future, according to diplomats here whose sources of information are better than those usually available.In any event the great crisis in the war impends. Should the armistice commissioners wait until the last possible moment before making a decision, it will be in the hands of the entente allies not later than eleven o'clock (French time) on Monday morning. If they accept there will be a prompt action by the allies to resist any Bolshevik outrages such as plunged Russia into its present chaos.
There will, however, be no interference of any sort by the allies with the policy which the German government people there want.Should the armistice terms be rejected, then the war will go on just as at present. The present movements now in progress will make for the complete crushing of the German army if the war continues. Officials today pointed out that the military operations of the last week of October, in the light of the armistice developments. However, the Germans have only one of their stagnant railway lines, that down the valley of the Meuse, in operation. The line to Metz is under the fire of the American guns and it has no cross connections with the Meuse route. Lille and Valenciennes lines are no longer operating and which feeds Maubourg is under British fire.The mouth of the pocket through which all of the German armies left France, is now less than sixty miles wide and every hour sees it shortened. Realization of this fact has caused the military command here to hope that at the armistice terms and decide to fight on.
Should this be done, these experts say, the war will end anyhow before the end of the year, and a complete victory for the allied armies.However, the next 48 hours must of necessity, tell the tale.ALL BUSINESS HOUSES CLOSED IN ST. LOUIS

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

St. Louis, Nov. 9.—As the result of drastic action issued by the health department, business is at a standstill in St. Louis today. Retail, wholesale and manufacturing establishments are closed light under the new regulations.The sweeping ban, which is the result of an alarming increase in the number of new influenza cases and the spread of extraordinary outbreaks of the disease due to the present peace celebration caused by the publication of false news of the signing of armistice terms sent out by the United Press association, will remain in effect until next Wednesday.The number of influenza cases reported today shows a decrease of 20 per cent, 315 new cases recorded today against 376 yesterday. There were 28 deaths from influenza yesterday.
The total number of cases since the epidemic began is 12,415. 629 deaths from influenza have occurred since Oc-

FLURRY IN CORN MARKET

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

Chicago, Nov. 9.—Giant alternate swings upward and downward in the corn market have resulted this week from false armistice reports and from rumors of the signing of peace terms.
Whether probable greatly enlarged food requirements for Europe has not already offset bearish aspects of a cessation of hostilities. Prices this morning opened with a weak tone, but rose to 9 1/2c higher for corn. With oats up 1/4c and 5 1/2c rovisions showed grains rising from 22c to 23.60.

to that sector of the front. It is impossible for the enemy to shift his forces to meet a new attack.Summarizing the allied successes since the inauguration of the new that the Germans had been driven 65 miles further from Paris and the territory they occupied has been reduced from 10,000 square miles to less than 2,000.The American first army under not return at all on that day or the

Hazelton's Series of Stories By Famous Duck Hunters of America

DUCKING ON THE SUSQUEHANNA
PLAINS, PAST AND PRESENT.

By George L. Hopper.

The autumn day is decked with gold, and wildfowl hover down the dusky air.

The Susquehanna ducking grounds, or the Susquehanna river flats, are located within that grand old Commonwealth, the State of Maryland, extending from the eastern shore of the Chesapeake Bay, ten miles in width, thence from the mouth of the Susquehanna river, down the bay, a distance of four or five miles. Through almost the center of the flats, to Spesutia Island, a deep channel flows, of sufficient depth to allow vessels drawing from eight to ten feet of water to navigate, with the aid and assistance of tugs or other steam craft. On both sides of the channel the flats extend to both the western and eastern shores, subdivided here and there by sloughs. The flats are plainly outlined and designated by the dense growth of wild celery, which is covered, during normal tides, with from four to eight feet of fresh water. During an extremely dry summer, the water becomes slightly brackish.

The wild celery of the Susquehanna flats is one of the most enticing of all the wild-duck foods in our southern waters. It is especially sought after by the canvasbacks, redheads and blackhead ducks. All the other varieties feed upon the wild celery, more or less. Several of the smaller varieties are exceedingly fond of it, but not strong enough to make the deep dive and pull it loose, root and branch. The ruddy and baldpate depend largely upon what they can grab from the surface of the water. Mallards and black ducks are seldom, if ever, found upon the flats, since they are not deep-water ducks. They prefer to remain almost entirely in the marshlands. The Canada goose and the whistling swan, in early days, were also found in great numbers upon the Susquehanna flats. Since the passage of the migratory bird laws, the return of the geese and swans have been especially noted by the personal observation of many sportsmen. They have been particularly noticed just before the birds' annual flight to the breeding grounds in the Northland. It is a most wonderful and interesting sight to watch the movements of the wildfowl just a few days before they start on their northern journey. All the ducks of the South Atlantic coast seem to assemble there. The greatest confusion now prevails among them. They congregate in many flocks, each flock covering several acres. Flock after flock will rise, circle and re-circle over the flats, returning almost to the very spot or place from which they had just arose. Many individuals and small squads are continuously visiting the larger flocks, back and forth. They are flying all day long. This continues until the weather conditions are just right, when they know, as nobody else does, when they all take wing, rising higher and higher each time they make the circle over the flats; and every time they re-circle, a large flock breaks the dense mass, heading north-northwest, without any mariner's compass to guide them over a trackless route to their far-away Northern breeding grounds. Sometimes they fall at sunrise, sometimes at sundown. Many remain for a few days after the first great flight. Then they will all be gone excepting a few stragglers, and the poor cripples, who are obliged to remain. Those remaining pair off, mate, and nest in the marshlands.

The first authenticated record of the great number and variety of the great number of ducks who annually assemble upon the headwaters of the Chesapeake Bay is recorded in a little personal log-book of Captain John Smith, who, according to our early history, was the first white man to navigate the bay and Susquehanna river, the river being navigable for a distance of only about four and a half miles.

When we consider how accessible the Susquehanna flats and ducking grounds are to the most densely populated sections of our country, and what a continuous annual slaughter of those ducks have been taking place ever since the first settlers, it is a wonder there is a single duck remaining to return to those winter feeding grounds.

More than a hundred bush-whack or sneak-boats, and seventy-five single and double sink-boxes were licensed by the county authorities bordering on the headwaters of the bay this season. More than 5,000 ducks were killed on November 4, 1918, the first day of the present open season. More than 5,000 ducks were killed on November 4, 1918, the first day of the present open season.

Every method, fair and foul, has been devised to decoy and capture the ducks upon these feeding grounds. The tolling Chesapeake retriever, shooting over baited grounds, shooting blind bush-whack or sneak-boats, and sink-boxes—all of which are legitimate according to the local laws; while the market hunters resort every foul and unlawful device, the swivel gun and gill net at night, being the most unsportsmanlike.

The sink-box and its equipment is undoubtedly the most expensive "lay-out" which a duck hunter can possess, requiring from three to five hundred dollars, and a crew of three men to man the yacht and look-out boat. Shooting from a sink-box, over a many decoys, is the most magnificent and exhilarating of all such sport. A good shot from a sink-box, like old Captain Bill Dobson, the greatest shot from a sink-box that ever lived, can do wonderful execution. His name became a household word, by reason of his mysterious and successful methods of decoying ducks. He never possessed such a thing as an artificial duck call. He did it with his hands by imitating the tapping of a duck's wings, holding them just above the side of the sink-box.

I have sat upon the deck of a gunning yacht, under the most favorable conditions, watching his operations. He was able to draw ducks within range from a considerable distance. When they were within hearing, he chattered to them like a female duck when it is feeding contentedly in some safe and secluded place. He always had three guns with him, one on each side of the box, and one in his lap. He could operate and discharge three muzzle-loaded guns successfully upon a darting flock, killing the last ducks well within bounds. With his old muzzle-loaded guns, he has been known to bag nearly five hundred canvasbacks and redheads in a day's shoot. On one occasion I saw a flock of eleven canvasbacks dart to his decoys, and not one came out. He did it with five shots.

Rear Admiral Robley D. Evans, our own "Fighting Bob," in his lifetime frequently visited the Susquehanna ducking grounds during the open season. He always engaged Captain George Mitchell, lighthouse keeper of the Battery Island lighthouse, which is located almost in the center of these shooting grounds. Turning to Captain Mitchell on one occasion, after making a clean right and left from the double sink-box, he exclaimed: "By the gods, Mitchell! I would rather do this than be president of the United States!"

As an evidence of how plentiful ducks were in the early days, negroes who were hired out annually by their masters to the owners of the fishing shores along the bay and river, complained upon their return to their own masters that they had nothing but ducks and fish to eat. It must have been too early in the season for diamond-back terrapin, and too late in the season for oysters, or the ducks would have been included in the bill of complaints.

Old contracts of those days, between the old slave-holders of that section, can still be seen on file at the Hartford county courthouse, where they are often shown to visitors. The contracts usually stipulate, after the usual legal phrase, "if negroes shall not be fed upon wild ducks more than three times a week," etc. How interesting the club epicureans of this day and time!

Orfordville, Nov. 7.—Dan Mowe died on Thursday afternoon at the home of his sister, Mrs. E. J. Taylor, after an illness of several years duration. Nothing that Medical science knew but had been tried in the effort to baffle the disease and prolong his life. Mr. Mowe had been station agent and telegraph operator at the local station and up to a few months ago had performed the duties connected with the position. He was greatly interested in the welfare of his fellow workmen and for many years was chairman of the Railway Telegraphers' Brotherhood and for several seasons spent the summer months in attendance upon the sessions of the Brotherhood where his council and advice was always considered, careful and wise. For many years he was one of the leaders in the local Lodge of Odd Fellows. He was also a member of the F. & A. M.

No man in the community held the respect and esteem of his fellows to a greater degree, and his demise is a distinct loss to Orfordville, who will keenly feel it.

The funeral of the late Oscar Eidahl was held from the home and from the Valley funeral home on Thursday afternoon, conducted by the pastor, Rev. Ivar Ramseth. Interment was in the cemetery adjoining.

As Mr. Schroeder of Hanover was returning from Orfordville, on Thursday afternoon, the horse which he was driving became frightened and he was thrown out striking his shoulder against a telephone pole in such a way as to dislocate it. Dr. Forbush reduced the dislocation and Mr. Schroeder proceeded on his way home.

OUR SATURDAY NIGHT

With peace looming large in the near future, our country, which has been devoting time, energy and money to war for the past year or more, is preparing rapidly to resume business at the old stand, and while the aftermath of war will be felt for a time, the dawn of the new year will find us with the situation well in hand. The first step in the movement was a long stride forward made at the election last Tuesday, when the people said to the autocrat at Washington, and the party to which he belongs, "We have tolerated you and submitted to all sorts of indignities because of the war, but with peace in sight we will no longer submit."

The handwriting is on the wall, and southern democracy, now in the saddle at the national capital, will do well to make the most of its opportunities, for it is liable to be a long time between drinks. The free trade South is a firm believer in protected cotton, and the people of the country have been compelled to pay the freight, and there will be a hereafter and the party responsible will be held accountable. The cotton situation is only one of a long list of grievances for which democracy must atone. The war has been an excuse for incompetency and inefficiency all along the line, and the country is cursed today with all sorts of boards and commissions whose business it is to regulate everything in sight and whose power is absolute.

For the first time in the history of our nation our people have submitted to monarchical rule. Someone called it a mild monarchy, but there was nothing mild about it. Our president has been clothed with autocratic power and he has not hesitated to use it to the limit. Congress—supposed to represent the people—has stood up and sat down to his beck and call, like a lot of school boys, and the people have submitted to his will without audible complaint, because we were so busy with the war. In discussing President Wilson as a great man, it is well to remember that he was favored with the greatest opportunity man ever came to an American citizen. His ability to meet it was no greater than the ability of thousands of men. The war was the only thing that saved Mr. Wilson and his party from failure, and with the war removed the man and his party will soon be relieved from power.

The opportunity has added something to President Wilson's stature as a man, but nothing to the stature of the democratic party. The latter fact will be painfully discovered in the day of reckoning in the not distant future. The public crib with its thousands of millions of dollars in sight, and a free-for-all scramble, invited all sorts of extravagance and reckless spending, which even war, in the cold light of the next morning will not excuse. The Chicago Tribune, in commenting on the election says:

"The congressional elections have been duly held. The American people in the free exercise of their political judgment have selected their representatives in the next congress. It is time to adjourn politics, to adjourn it sincerely until such time as politics once more properly claims direction of our national affairs. We have before us what remains of the task of conducting the war to victory, of formulating terms which shall insure us the objects of our sacrifice, and of guiding the national energies back into the normal channels of peace. In this complicated task we trust that the nation's highest interests, we are confident, will be dominated by republican leadership and republican patriotism, thus far in the national crisis and entrusted to them a larger share of responsibility and authority than they have hitherto enjoyed. This is a trust which will not be betrayed. America is the stronger for the change."

"The result of the election is moreover of historic significance in that it reaffirms the tradition of American political independence. We are still a republic. The drift toward centralization of power in the executive, the insidious tendency to absorb authority in a personality, however well intended, has received an abrupt and emphatic check. The precedent set by Mr. Wilson in his remarkable and deplorable appeal for the practical elimination of congressional participation in the formulation of national policy has been repudiated. It is a precedent upon which no future president will be likely to rely."

The last paragraph is significant because it recognizes the great truth that we are "still a republic." Fear has been entertained that the autocracy which the war made necessary, might be continued indefinitely and that the commencing of property as a war measure, might be followed by confiscation after peace is declared, but the voice of the people was expressed last Tuesday, in no uncertain terms, and it sounded the death knell of Czarism in America as well as a warning to Socialism and Bolshevism. The democracy for which we have been fighting, is still very much alive in this country, and it will long continue to be "the land of the free."

The problems of peace are already demanding attention and they will be tackled with the same vigor that characterized the nation when at war. The real holes, where money is disappearing like water through a sieve, are so numerous that the first consideration is to plug them up and stop the waste. The reckless expenditure of money is so glaring that Senator Martin of Virginia, democratic leader of the Senate and chairman of the Senate appropriation committee, has issued a warning that the administration adopt immediately a drastic program of economy, curtailment and salvage.

The senator has conferred on the subject with leading administration officials from President Wilson down. Some are not in accord with the rigid program of the senator. Senator Martin will lay his views before the senate at an early date.

The majority leader of the senate declared that it is up to the administration to cut the treasury many billions of the $7,000,000,000 appropriated by congress since the war began. He expects to submit data at an early date showing just how much of the total appropriations are still unexpended and how much of the unspent balance can be turned back into the treasury.

Immediate cessation of the war waste, he said, has as its alternative "fifty years of national slavery."

There are some things he regards as necessary:

The immediate cancellation of such war contracts as are not imperatively necessary.

The prompt return of the American soldiers from abroad when no longer necessary to the war.

The discontinuance of further troop movements from the United States to Europe.

The suspension of recruiting for the national army and only necessary maintenance of troops in cantonments.

The immediate weeding out of non-essential war workers.

The senator will have the backing of the entire country in any effort he may make to save the people money. Liberty bonds are an investment, and paying for them at a sacrifice is cultivating the saving habit, which is a mighty good thing for us as a people, but the taxes which loom up just ahead are appalling and in many lines of business they amount to confiscation. To complain while the war was on would have been called disloyal, but there is a limit to endurance, and with peace as an established fact, protests may be expected from every quarter.

The best financial brain of the country is demanded on this home problem, the solution of which is vital to the future of the country. The nation's scrap heap must necessarily be large, but it should cease to be a dumping ground as soon as peace is declared. We have become so accustomed to dealing in large figures that a million dollars, more or less, meant nothing to us, but the pursuits of peace will produce a radical change, and public servants, whether of high or low degree, will be held to strict account.

The return of our boys—four million strong—many of them from the front, will create a new atmosphere in our civic, social, political and religious life, but they are American boys coming home not as boys, but as full-fledged men, with a knowledge of the world and of humanity that will serve as an inspiration to us. This influx of new life will demand recognition, and under its influence the nation will expand and grow. We will learn to think of the old world as a part of the new, and with a broader vision a common brotherhood will be recognized.

With peace declared the nation enters upon a reconstruction period such as it has never known. An era of great opportunity is presented for it is our privilege to demonstrate to the world that democracy is not a myth and that the best governed people are the people who govern themselves.

We have been living under such high pressure for the past few years that normal conditions will be slow to come. The high cost of living will slowly decrease and as the purchasing power of a dollar increases in value, wages will find their level under the old order of supply and demand, but the outlook for prosperity was never brighter, and in this prosperity everyone may share. It is a good time to thank God for a home and citizenship in this free land and then thank him again for the peace for which we have so long prayed and waited.

FAITH

Grief is the loss of a precious love. And trouble and hope in danger. Yet tears shall fall like the rain above. And care to no man is stranger. Time's clock is checked with its hours of doubt. With trouble and grief they're blended; But failure comes when the faith runs out. Ere the strength of a man is ended.

It is faith that bridges the land of breath To the realms of the souls departed; That comforts the living in days of death And strengthens the heavy-hearted. It is faith in his dreams that keeps a man Face-front to the odds about him. And he shall conquer who thinks he can. In spite of the throngs who doubt him.

Each must stand in the court of life And pass through his hours of trial. He shall be tested by the rules of strife. And tried for his self-denial. Time shall bruise his soul with the loss of friends, And frighten him with disaster. But he shall find when the anguish ends That of all things faith is master.

So keep your faith in the God above And bring you back to the absent love. And the joys of a vanished youth. You shall smile once more when your tears trouble and swiftly rout it. For faith is the strength of the soul inside. And lost is the man without it.

SIX DRUNKS FINED BY JUDGE MAXFIELD

Six came to court and six were fined, and every one of them for being drunk. Possibly the majority of the men became too nervous at the report of the armistice being signed, but nevertheless they were drunk and every one of them admitted it. It was the busiest morning that the municipal court has had in nearly two weeks. Ole Yuba was given a fine of ten dollars and costs, or fifteen days, and Peter Yost, who followed him before the bench, had a similar story, and he also received the ten dollar and costs assessment.

E. Donaldson, a colored gentleman from Beloit, came up smiling. He admitted that he had come from Beloit to Janesville to quench his thirst but he didn't have any intention of getting drunk. However, he was given a fine of twenty dollars and costs, or thirty days.

Chris. Bolstead was let down with a fine of ten dollars and costs after he openly admitted that he was drunk. Bolstead was given a small fine for his frankness in telling his story. Claude Cartwright drew a fine of fifteen dollars and costs, or twenty days, on his plea of guilty to the charge of drunkenness. The total was assessed the limit, which is twenty-five dollars and costs, or thirty days.

JANESVILLE LOSES TO WALWORTH AGAIN; 19 TO 0

The Janesville High school football team again went down to defeat at the hands of Walworth Friday afternoon at Walworth by the score of 19 to 0. Although they were beaten, the team played fifty per cent better than when they first lost to Walworth in the first game of the season. Walworth scored once in each of the first three periods and two of the touchdowns were direct fakes. Both of the fakes were made by Walworth, and running good distances for the touchdowns. During most of the game the Janesville line held especially in the last quarter when their opponents were held scoreless. Two men from the Blue's aggregation were absent, Hanson and Crowley, which handicapped the team to an extent. Blackie at tackle played the best game for Janesville, time after time, breaking through the heavy line of Walworth for good tackles. Allen and Nugum at ends showed up good, as did the entire back field, composed of Roy, Alter, Rost and Sprackling. The game was planned for today but was changed to yesterday afternoon, at a late hour Friday morning.

Jefferson will play the locals in this city next Saturday. Janesville's lineup for yesterday's game follows: Right end, Nugum; right tackle, Dugan; right guard, Puchs; center, Scobie; left guard, Garvin; left tackle, Blackie; left end, Allen; quarterback, Roy; right half, Rost; left half, Sprackling; fullback, Alter.

Each must stand in the court of life And pass through his hours of trial. He shall be tested by the rules of strife. And tried for his self-denial. Time shall bruise his soul with the loss of friends, And frighten him with disaster. But he shall find when the anguish ends That of all things faith is master.

ON THE SPUR of the MOMENT

A LITTLE SLICE OF LIFE.

I went with a friend To a "cheap" restaurant. A "poor man's" restaurant, Of which there are many Here and there. The management of this place Harangues its customers On the subject of patriotism And food administration; And when the management Gets the customer excited About helping win the war, It charges them ten cents for Two small pieces of toast, Thereby making a dollar On every loaf of bread. For a piece of pumpkin pie, Not extra-good pumpkin pie, Just restaurant pumpkin pie, The charge is twenty cents. With six cents the pie, Every pie in a 25c pie, And the whole pie costs Not more than fifteen cents With everything else In proportion. I figured That it would pay a "poor man" To eat at Sherry's or Del's.

PRIVATE OTTO HANSON WOUNDED IN FIGHTING HAS RETURNED TO U. S.

First Member of Company M to Be Invalided Home is Enjoying a Furlough Here—Wounded at Cantigny.

Otto Hanson, the first Company M soldier to be returned to the United States on account of wounds, has arrived in Janesville and is visiting at the home of E. W. Taylor, 825 Thomas street.

Private Hanson was wounded in the battle of Cantigny, on his first trip over the top. He suffered a machine gun wound in his left ankle. His comrades had just gained their objective when Private Hanson fell with a machine gun bullet in his ankle.

He was born in Denmark and came to the United States in April, 1914. He enlisted in Company M the day after war was declared and remained a member of Company M until they arrived in France, where he was transferred with the other boys to Company B, 28th Infantry.

Private Hanson was confined to the American Red Cross base at Cantigny for three months and was assigned to a hospital at Rawley, N. J., when he arrived in this country. He was transferred shortly afterward to a hospital at Newport News, where he stayed until he received permission to visit Janesville.

Private Hanson tells in a very concise manner the methods used by the Americans in fighting and also gives a very good idea of the methods employed by the Germans. He went over the top early in the morning at the battle of Cantigny, where he fought during the morning, only to be wounded just as their objective was gained.

Private Hanson will remain in Janesville for a short time, after which he will return to the hospital. When he returns to the hospital he will be sent to a government school for wounded soldiers where he will learn the machinists' trade.

BIDS PAL GOOD BYE AT CAMP GRANT, THEN HEARS OF HIS DEATH

It came as such a sudden shock to him that only the soldier himself will be able to explain his feelings. He was at Camp Grant, then, and he heard of his death.

The Camp Grant soldier came to Janesville on the car which arrived yesterday morning. He had been at Camp Grant for a short time and was about to leave for a new assignment.

On reaching the city he was in company with three other soldiers who were waiting for the train. He was looking at the pictures in the window.

His gaze fell on a bulletin and he moved closer to the bulletin board to read it.

He commenced to read how a special train carrying Camp Grant soldiers was wrecked at Sugar Grove, Wis., this morning.

He read that his buddy had been killed. Those six quick spoken words explain the tragedy.

His buddy was in the army company with him. He was a common phrase for friend in the army.

He was in a wreck while en route to Chicago.

Standing with tear dimmed eyes in front of the bulletin board the young soldier told how he had decided not to go to the front.

PREPARING FOR THE RECEIPT OF GENUINE ARMISTICE SIGNING

They are still fighting over there in France, our own Janesville boys, those who are in the 28th Infantry and the thirty-second division; the French are advancing and the British are cleaning up with the aid of the Belgians in the north.

That is the condition of the war and yet on Thursday it was announced that peace had come, that the armistice had been signed, and one of the news distribution agencies sent forth a cablegram to the effect that the fighting had stopped.

Here it is forty-eight hours afterward and the fighting is still going on.

The armistice celebration or announcement because it was believed to be premature by the Associated Press and the International News Service.

WILLIAM CHURCHILL INJURED IN EXPLOSION

William Churchill was quite severely injured this morning when the threshing machine which he was operating on the James McGraw farm at the town of Fulton caught fire and exploded, throwing him three feet. His body was badly bruised and his face swollen. The fire department from Janesville was called, making the run of about eight miles in record time. The building caught on fire and the corn crib and that was quickly extinguished. Mr. Churchill was removed to his home.

"You have earned the privilege. Pray be seated."

The visitor came slowly, haltingly across the room. He came to the table, but did not accept the proffered chair. He stood in an attitude of listless exhaustion, his hands clasped on his heavy walking-stick, his face with its almost unearthly transparency half turned to the impinging sunlight.

"I was in the Arab quarter last night, Colonel Destina. All-Mahomed's brother heads a fresh rising. There will be an attack from the north. The Arabs in the town are arming stealthily, but they will only move if there has been success outside."

Colonel Destina nodded.

"That is interesting. If your information is correct, we shall have further cause to be grateful to you, Mr. Lowe."

"It is probably one of the last services I shall be able to render, Colonel Destina. I am retiring from the service."

"France will be the loser."

Stephen Lowe did not speak for a moment. He was gazing fixly and apparently indifferently at the great map spread out on the table before him.

"I wish to retire a rich man, Colonel Destina."

Destina looked up into the keen significant eyes.

"You are very persistent, Mr. Lowe," he said.

Stephen Lowe leaned forward; his frail body emanated a sudden power and the knowledge of power.

"I do not know. My offer is not the old offer, Colonel Destina. It's not money. As a French officer and a naturalized Frenchman, you never can offer your invention to another nation."

"There is a man who will inherit it—my son."

"Tomorrow you may have no son."

Destina made a single gesture—the instinctive, upward movement of a man seeking to protect the face from a sudden blow.

"My son is in England; he is with his regiment."

"If you had accepted my second offer you would know that he resigned his commission over a year ago. He did so at Sower's request—to save your honor."

He waited a moment, studying the livid immobile features with a plying interest. The iron mask was down. It was a curious, terrible thing to see this man, who had braved death and every law of humanity, reel with the shaking foundations of his secret temple. "You gave your son his life," Lowe went on quietly. "You have ruined it. In a few hours it may finally be taken from him. It lies in your power to give him back that life and the conditions which make it worth the living. Have you not—as I have—some sense of atonement?"

"Atonement—yes?"

Lowe bowed his head in grave depression.

"I am a blackmailing scoundrel, and quite ruthless—as you have been and are. But I understand atonement. Moreover, you know that I am not lying—and that what I promise to do I will do."

PETEY DINK—IT'S A CLEVER IDEA, BUT PETEY WON'T GET AWAY WITH IT.

IF BUSINESS KEEPS UP THE WAY IT HAS BEEN, PETEY OUGHT TO GIVE ME A RAISE.

—OH, ARE YOU LEAVING US EDMUND? WHY, THAT'S TOO BAD.

MR. DINK FIRED ME.

—WELL, I'M GLAD PETEY'S GETTING A LITTLE SENSE, THERE WAS NO NEED TO SPEND FOUR DOLLARS A WEEK FOR AN OFFICE BOY IN THIS OFFICE.

HENRIETTA—THIS IS JULIA, JULIA, IS TO BE OUR OFFICE-GIRL—AT TEN A WEEK.

Colonel Destina turned and crossed the room. Lowe waited composedly, without triumph. He saw Destina take a key from the inner pocket of his tunic and insert it in the lock of the small iron safe set into the wall. He came back a moment later with a sheet of transparent paper in his hand. He swayed slightly.

"These are the plans."

Lowe made a little movement of assent.

"Consider! A friendly power—"

Destina laughed under his breath. Very deliberately he tore the delicate paper across and across. "Not that," he said under his breath, "not that! My son—would not desire that."

There was a silence. Stephen Lowe glanced curiously and a little bitterly at the white shreds fluttering through the sunlight, and then for the last time at the peaceful face of the man beside him.

"You may be right," he said. "It is quite possible that you are right. But I am not made like that, Colonel Destina."

He went out, closing the door softly after him.

CHAPTER XX.

Fate Decides.

Destina had decreed that Desire Arnaud should die. He was in his room now, dying quietly and unostentatiously, "from the brain downward," as the doctor had explained to Madame Arnaud with extreme gentleness, and had been deeply moved by the manner of its reception. She had not cried or fainted. She had looked at him with her warm brown eyes, and had given him her hand with a quiet dignity.

"It is the will of God, doctor."

He had admired her immensely, and she had admired herself. "The will of God!" It was beautiful and simple, and it was wonderful to find that in spite of modern skepticism all things work out for the best for those who surrender themselves to the unseen guidance.

And now this woman was here—this woman in the pale gray dress, with the brown hair and small, dead-white face, out of which the eyes burned with a fierce consuming energy and purpose.

"Mrs. Farquhar lies stricken with total paralysis," Gabrielle Smith said. "She cannot speak to me, but I can read her eyes. She is asking for her son, Madame Arnaud, you have influence with Colonel Destina. You can set Richard Farquhar free. You can atone."

"Atone?" It seemed incredible, ridiculous. It was tactless. Above all, it brought storm into her peace. Yet she remained gentle—very calm.

"You ask me to intervene at a strange moment for a strange cause, Miss Smith," she said. "My husband is dying."

"And the man who saved him?"

Sylvia glanced toward the curtained doorway and laid her finger gently to her lips.

"Hush, you must not talk so loud. My husband is sleeping. And then—I am sorry—I can do nothing. Should I be justified in trying? Your—feeling blinds you, Miss Smith. I cannot, even for the memory of a girlhood's friendship, take up arms—risk perhaps humiliation and misunderstanding for a man who sold his country for a woman."

"Mr. Preston is in Sidi-bel-Abbes," was the answer. "Mr. Preston knows that Richard chose the appearance of dissonance to save your husband—your happiness, Madame Arnaud."

Sylvia recoiled the step she had taken. Her hands were pressed to her face.

"If that were true—" But she did not ask a question. She knew that it was true. It was pitiable—terrible—beautiful. Her whole soul seemed to expand beneath its beauty. There had been no "other woman" in his life—only the one—Sylvia Arnaud, for whom he had sacrificed his honor, his name, his place. And now it was for her to act and to use her power nobly—to regain the ground lost on that fatal evening—to win back the holy place in his life. Suddenly she held out her hands.

"Gabrielle, forgive me!" she said gently, and there were tears gathering on her long lashes. "I must have seemed hard—wicked. I did not understand. I had not your love—or the faith that love gives. I saw only dishonor—and sometimes we who stand outside the stress of life judge very harshly."

"But you knew him," was the stern reproach.

"I was a child, Gabrielle. Can't you understand? Will you, too, judge harshly?"

The clear eyes darkened. Gabrielle Smith did not take the extended hands. Her own were clasped before her.

"I have come to plead with you, Madame Arnaud—not to judge."

"And if I promise you—if I tell you that I will do all that lies in my power—"

"Then my errand is accomplished." Sylvia's hands dropped. It struck her that this woman had a mean soul, coarsened with rough contact with the world. She could not rise to the high altitudes of forgiveness and reconciliation. She could only grasp the material things of life. Sylvia caught a glance of her own reflection in the glass opposite, and she saw how ethereal her own beauty had become. After all, beauty is the outward and visible sign. Suddenly her name was called—roughly yet piteously—and her eyes sank.

"That's my husband," she said gravely. "Even in his delirium he is always calling for me. The dying are sacred, are they not? We must forgive them as we forgive the dead."

"Yes," Gabrielle assented.

"I must go to him. But I will do what I have promised. I—will atone for him. Perhaps it may soothe his pain. Comfort him to think that the wrong he has done has been righted—don't you think?"

"Perhaps."

But Gabrielle Smith did not seem to see the extended hand. There was a hard line about the pale mouth, and without greeting—almost as though goaded by an impatient contempt—she went out of the open French windows into the brazen glare of the afternoon.

Sylvia Arnaud watched the slight upright figure vanish into the archway beyond the courtyard. She was vaguely disconcerted—like an actress left suddenly without her cue—and beneath the tranquil consciousness of virtue the old hatred, the old mistrust.

In the sickroom all was still again. The blinds were drawn, and in the green-tinted shadows Desire's face showed like a white light. She went softly over to his bedside and sat down, looking at him. His eyes were closed and he appeared to sleep. A cold wonder crept over her. He had changed so completely in those few months of their married life that the change ceased to be terrible. This was not the man whose fleeting, unknown fascination had caught her restless fancy—not even the man she had grown weary of. He was nothing—a mere husk of something that had once been. Still, as she sat there and looked back on those months, many things became triumphantly clear to her. She understood why she had grown weary, and why weariness had changed to nausea. He was a bad man. He had stunted; he had let another suffer for him, and had pursued his victim with a relentless hatred. Her woman's instinct had recognized the evil and had passed judgment. Beside him Richard Farquhar's figure gleamed in the limelight of her imagination—a chevalier of the old school, quixotic and romantic. But she did not love him. Perhaps there was even somewhere in her a vague contempt—at least, a slightly patronizing pity strengthened by the knowledge that now his salvation was in her hands. Her thoughts passed on from him to the implacable, ruthless man who had come back to her out of the jaws of death, and to whom she was going with the surrender of her whole self. And as she thought of him invisible hands tore down the veil, and she saw the picture that he had painted of her—saw it and shrank from it even though she knew that it was the insignia of his power.

Desire's eyes opened. They rested full on her face, and in their recognition, their pathetic, helpless worship she regained herself and the heights of her virtue. She bent over him.

"Are you better, Desire?"

"Sylvia." His hand groped feebly for hers. She touched it kindly. She would not reproach him. She was forgiving him. He was going to die. And then she would be free. She did not think of her freedom. It was like a hidden pulse—beating persistently, feverishly.

"I heard you call," she said. "Is there anything want? The nurse will be back in a moment."

He cursed her hand with an infinite tenderness.

"They are going to shoot him at daybreak," he said very gently. "And then all will be well, will it not? You will forget him. You will learn to understand—everything. We shall begin a new life together in a new world, my wife. There will be no shadow between us where we are going—"

She shrank from him, half in horror, half in vague fear. He was dying, and he seemed so sure. He did not ask for forgiveness; there was no remorse in his sunken eyes—rather, a grave, serene pity. His hand still held hers. There was a power in its weakness which terrified her; she felt as though she would never be able to free herself.

"Sylvia—you will not leave me? I feel as though I could rest with you beside me. You will stay?"

"Yes—yes."

"I have loved you so greatly, my wife. I have been down to hell for love of you, and now I am fighting my way back—to you—to the light. Love is stronger than sin—than death—than God himself—" His voice trailed off again, his eyelids dropped, hiding the pale light of ecstatic delirium.

The nurse entered on tiptoe.

Dinner Stories

The dentist has his troubles. After working on a woman who had an extravagant coiffure to impede his progress, an attendant, his manipulations, Dr. Fellenberg sighed his relief and motioned for her to rise.

The woman pulled herself together, looked into the mirror, and then seated herself in the chair.

"I am all through with your teeth," the dentist told her.

"I know," the woman answered, "but aren't you going to fix up my hair?"

"James," said Mrs. Mellow to the man servant, "can you find out whether or not the salmon was all eaten last night? I don't want to ask the new cook, because she may have eaten it, and then she would feel uncomfortable."

"Please, ma'am," replied James, "the new cook ate all the salmon, an' no matter what you was to say to her you couldn't make her more uncomfortable than she is now."

A couple were before Magistrate Koenig with their troubles when the husband began arguing with his wife.

"Don't you know better than to argue with your wife in a court said a court attendant to the man."

"Let him alone. Perhaps this is the only place where chance he's got," commented the court.

"My boy Bernie is lazy, but I must say he is smart," said the mother to a friend.

"He is going to follow in your foot steps?"

"No. I learned to play the trombone, and I've got to march about in a parade every time there is a funeral. Bernie is learning the harp, so they will have to let him sit down."

SIDE LIGHTS on the CIRCUS BUSINESS

By D. W. WATT

Former Manager Burr Robbins and Later Treasurer of Adam Forepaugh Circuses.

It was in the fall of '64 that Adam Forepaugh came to Delavan, Wisconsin and purchased the Mable show which at the time was one of the best in the country. Mr. Forepaugh drove the entire show across the country to Chicago and shipped it over the Pennsylvania road to Philadelphia and the following spring after the show had been rebuilt and much added to it, he started out from Philadelphia for the first time in his career as a showman.

From that time on, until his death, Adam Forepaugh never had a partner, and with the exception of some two or three years, was manager of the show himself. He ran all the main privileges such as cook tent, side show, reserved seats and canvas stands, and after that it was only a very few small privileges that were ever leased to outsiders.

In the spring of '82, which was my first year with the show, a man by the name of B. F. Keith came to Washington, D. C. and hired a privilege of Adam Forepaugh to run what was known as "Lung Tester" in the side show. This was a device something like the face of a large clock with a hand pointing to figures running from 1 to 100 with a long rubber tube connection and in this tube patrons would blow and the hand would rise up and indicate as the manager said "the strength of your lungs." If you could blow into this indicator so as to raise the hand above 50 you were supposed to have the best of lungs.

Mr. Keith had with him a young man some 21 or 22 years of age whose business it was to circulate around the show, the crowd in the side show, soliciting patronage for the Lung Tester. As the price was but 5c Mr. Keith and his lung tester was a success from the very start.

Mr. Keith's helper's name was "Eddie Albee" and more faithful worker was not to be found around the show. It was early in the season that Mr. Keith came to me and asked if I would not take too much trouble if he got a larger express envelope with his name printed on and when he got $50.00 or $100.00 to spare, he would put it in the envelope and give it to me to put in the safe, so that he would have his money where he could get it in case of need.

The show went south that fall and closed the season late in Chattanooga, Tenn. on the 19th of November. Mr. B. F. Keith had made plans to go to Boston and open a dime museum. This he did, and in the late fall of '82 he would not take too much trouble if he got a larger express envelope with his name printed on and when he got $50.00 or $100.00 to spare, he would put it in the envelope and give it to me to put in the safe, so that he would have his money where he could get it in case of need.
